Successful applicants announced for $40m forestry recovery fund

The Morrison Government has today announced the 14 successful applicants for the Forestry Recovery Development Fund, which will provide $40 million in grant funding to help the forestry industry to recover from the devastating bushfires last summer.

Minister for Agriculture, Drought and Emergency Management David Littleproud and Assistant Minister for Forestry and Fisheries Jonno Duniam said the grants of between $1 million and $5 million were delivered through a competitive grants process, with funding for projects to be provided until 30 June 2023.

“The Australian Government is committed to supporting the forestry industry to recover from the bushfires and grow, in the immediate, medium and long term,” Minister Littleproud said.

“Projects include upgrades to existing facilities and technology, installation of new facilities that complement existing activities, and adjustments or diversification to make businesses more resilient.

“The forest industry is in a strong position to continue to grow and recover, and the Australian Government will be there every step of the way.”

Assistant Minister for Forestry and Fisheries Jonno Duniam said the grants would be critical in helping the forestry industry to adopt smarter, more efficient practices in product processing and forestry operations.

“These projects will strengthen industry and secure forestry processing assets while safeguarding and creating jobs, particularly in our regional communities,” Assistant Minister Duniam said.

“The bushfires last summer were devastating for the forestry industry – they impacted around 130,000 hectares of plantation forests and about two million hectares of public native forest available for timber production.

“These grants will support Australia’s forestry industry to build back better by investing in public–private partnerships that deliver innovation and industry diversification for long–term success.”
